I

I have been educated in a number of schools.

I am a good problem solver, a fast learner, and take credit for failure as well as success.

I have had many experiences, which provided me with numerous abilities.

I am passionate about the world, and interested in how it works.

I have travelled extensively, and am very open minded as a result.

I am dedicated to the pursuit of knowledge.

I strive for a balance in all things.

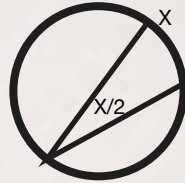

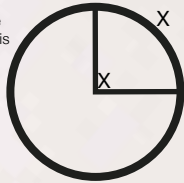

I like to work on my own, but also appreciate what a group can accomplish.

I cherish language, and speak bits and pieces of several.

I can be contacted via mail@sbramin.com, or +48 517 671 357.

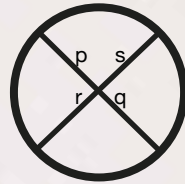

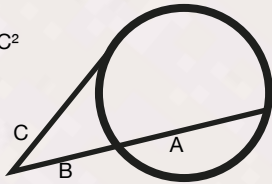

I am S. B. Ramin.

Hello Deer Productions Limited TV and film production company	Start up company needed advice on strategy and company formation...	Quickly and efficiently registered the company and set up the bookkeeping operation and prepared the management accounts

Testimonials

"I found Bloggs & Bloggs a pleasure to work with, and I couldn't believe how much cheaper they were than their competitors. I wouldn't hesitate to recommend them to any company starting out. They are friendly face in an otherwise horribly austere world!"

welcome to IT interesting technologies, the home of interesting solutions to your problems.

every conundrum, problem, mystery, complication, obstacle, squeeze, quandary, dilemma and enigma is of interest to us at IT for each of these has a solution and we have the technologies to find the unique key needed for your particular puzzle.

what's more is that we like to keep things simple. to do things in the cleanest, lightest most practical way humanly possible. some might say we are being austere but we prefer to think of minimalism in a positive way, to reduce, reuse and avoid waste. to not fix something that isn't broken and to avoid the superfluous. we have no interest in up selling, cross selling or any other method of conning you into more stuff you don't actually need.

all we want are your problems, because we find solving them terribly interesting.

after sitting for several hours with three chinese that spoke just a handful of english between them, one asked if anyone else on the train spoke english and a young women acted as translator. they offered to help me find a hotel once we arrived in taiwan (sp). it's doubtful that any foreigner has ever been to this place before, located on the fifth floor of an otherwise ordinary apartment building with private rooms for under five dollars. unlikely to win any awards but the bed linens are perfectly decent and the bed itself comfortable. my dinner consists of a bowl of noodles, a package of cookies and some green tea; all for under a dollar.

a chinese queue or line up should not be under estimated, nor should the word line be taken too seriously. there is a fair amount of pushing, squeezing and cutting in from every side. not to mention that people start massing around whatever is going to start a long time beforehand. mistakenly i arrived at the train station two hours before my departure and the waiting hall was already half full. all the spots by the gate filled. at first i entertained the idea that others had made the same mistake about the time of the train in question but have since observed this practice of premature queueing throughout china. it is my custom to wait sitting till near the end to board as there is no great hurry, the seat is reserved and one gains nothing but an extended period standing around waiting to board. it occurred to me that in china, under communism this may not have always been the case. supplies ran out, nothing was guaranteed and a person at the front of the line was sure to get something while a late comer might go home empty handed or not get home at all in the case of transport. this promotes cheating, if everyone is guaranteed a spot then sneaking ahead of the line will only save you some time but if supplies are limited it could make all the difference. when it was time to board people just entering the hall walked past the great line of people that had waited some two hours and squeezed into the front.

there are many reasons for people to go places and yet it is possible to fit most into two groups. the first is the tourist who has a list of sites and checks them off after completion. the second the traveler who goes to see what will be found along the way. these two groups are in strict contradiction as the first goes to see what they expect to find and the second to find the unexpected.
